Luminous

Seven quick zebras jog over the frozen fjord at dawn.

A facet is a flat face cut into a stone so that it catches the light. Every surface turns at its own angle, and together they make the object readable from any side. The letters of Facet are built the same way: firm verticals, open counters and terminals cut on a clean horizontal, so the rhythm holds from the finest hairline to the heaviest black.

Set it large and the cuts become a signature; set it small and they disappear into an even, quiet texture. Numbers sit on the same grid as the capitals, punctuation is drawn to the weight, and the italics slope at twelve degrees without losing their structure.
